The gontlemen in passing through the rooms noted the ventilating arrangements, which seemed to be admirable. The modelling-room, where the plaster cornices and borders are being made, was next visited. The work here is most interesting and was viewed with eagerness. On the committee's going to the eastern end of the main hallway of the first floor their attention was drawn to the excavation of the big pit beyond the building. Mr. Bates explained that owing to the difficulty experienced in removing the earth only one derrick could be operated in the excavation.

On the second floor the inspection of interior work was resumed. Further conversation concerning the cut chases was had, and Mr. Allen began an interrogation of Mr. Bates, as follows:

"In other words, Mr. Bates, the architect went ahead and drew up plans for the building without leaving provisions for lighting or heating?"

Mr. Sates: "There was a steam-heating system which was unsatisfactory and had to be characed."

Mr. King: "Can you give us any idea of how much these changes have cost the

The committee made inquiry about several other matters. The door to the Clerk's office of the Hustings-Court room was found to have been enlarged two inches after its original construction. HOWITZERS IN CAMP. DEPARTURE YESTERDAY OF Arrival at Ocean View in Good Time Enjoyable Reception-The Inci-dents of the Trip.

The gallant Richmond Howitzers left sterday afternoon at 2:58 o'clock via the stersburg and Norfolk and Western railoads for Ocean View, where they will pend ten days in camp on the seashore. bout half an hour before the time for parture the joyous artillerymen moved from their armory with all their accu tomed eclat. The men were equipped in heavy marching order, and with their reneavy marching order, and with their re-blankets, haversacks, sabres, and neat blu-nuiforms, they presented a very soldierly appearance, which, as usual, attracted the attention of the public and elicited uni-versal admiration.

A large crowd of spectators watched the battery as they steamed out from the depot.

Just as twilight stole over the hazy water of Gockin View the Howitzers reached their camp-ground, and as the train steamed up to the landing the booming of a cannon annonneed the arrival of the "Red Artitery." Bugler Lyuch, Corporal White, and Private Heffley had preceded the battery and everything was in readiness for the happy soldiers; twenty or more tents had been pitched in the rear of the hotel on the beautiful green sward and the work of consigning the men to their quarters only consumed a tew minutes. Earlier in the day Mrs. Hutcheson, the wife of the popular Captain, had hoisted the Stars and Stripes, and the banner futtered proudly to the breeze as the cannoncers alighted from the cars. In honor of the gallant commandant of the battery the quarters of the company will be called Camp Hutcheson. Some deserving philanthropist, anticipating the arrival of the artillery, brewed a most delightful bowl of punch for the visitors, and this rubicund decection was greeted with a degree of cordiality and affection which only the merry Howitzers can display.

JUSTICE TO SUPPEE.

As the train sped on towards its destination after leaving Kichmond First-Sergeant W. McK. Fisher, who appears to be acting as adjutant, commissary, and everything which is useful, sauntered through the cars and commenced the distribution of meal-tickets. These very essential articles were not forgotten when the campground was reached, and oh! what jove the soldier lads experienced when they presented those checks and got their supper at the hotel. There were amiable, law-abiding soft-shell crabe and genial, jocose oysters, to say nothing of kindly-disposed perch and warm-hearted batter-cakes. Saratoga chips and fried ham vied with each other in doing the honors of the occasion, and every Howitzer wore a joyous smile as he gazed upon the menustic gems before him. For a moment there was a pause and then a deadly conflict followed. Oysters and crabs disappeared as if by magic when the artillerymen began their onslaught. After the meal the boys scattered in overy direction and devoted themselves to pleasure and recreation. There was no difficulty in finding something to do, for scores of pretty girls were promenading on the verandas and the sweet strains of music filled the air.

on the verandas and the sweet strains of music filled the air.

The nors were tired.

Taps called the artillery men to their tents at 11 o'clock, and ere many minutes had passed the camp was as silent as a grave, for the boys were rather tired after their journey. Lieutenant Starke acted as officer of the day, while Corporals Kellam and White were officers of the guard. Privates Brooking, Anderson, Davis, and Creer were assigned to keep the nocturnal vigil. The band of the battery certainly did their part to make things lively, and when the train puffed up to the depot at Petersburg the musicians made the misty air of the Cockade Cityring with their melody, and a large crowded was attracted. Upon arriving in Norfolk the band gave a second exhibition of its skill, and this, too, drew another throng. When the Howitzers changed cars for Ocean View they were met by the Norfolk Blues, who celebrated the arrival of the visitors by firing several cannons and booming the Richmonders to the utmost.

genial Doctor Moses D. Hoge is tranquilly happy and more than ready to dose the first unfortunate patient with a score of pills, but from present prospects he will have no victims, for every one is bent on pleasure, and the sick list will be exceedingly small.

Lieutenant Mulford Crutchfield, the handsome young staff officer, no sooner arrived in camp than he commenced his primping, and ere many minutes he was on the "war" path and soon in the midst of a delighted maze of femininity. The Howitzers have been invited to make the Merrimac Club of Norfolk their headquarters while on their sojourn there.

Important Meeting of Les Camp To-Night Lee Camp will have a very important meeting to-night. The final arrangements for the encampment at Ocean View will be made, and it is necessary that every mem-ber who desires to go on the trip be pres-

Captain Brown has some information to impart which will be of interest to all who are interested in the outing. It is hoped that a large number will participate in this the first encampment of the veterans.
